or have just as they are passing from the milk stage. Later you can sow some German millet and cut it as soon as the heads are out, so that no seed will be left on the ripe seed. These are the best of the early crops, are rather dangerous for hogs to eat, but, too, needs a strong soil and liberal fertilization to make a good crop. Of course, oats sown in the fall will give a better crop, and there is no better hay than the crimson clover or oats and hairy vetch. As a fact, if the sowing is made early in September a mixture of one and a half bushels of oats and twenty-five pounds of hairy vetch makes as good a hay crop as you can get, even by sowing early in June a mixture of one bushel of soy beans and half a bushel of black cowpeas you can make a hay crop that will be very little if any inferior to alfalfa, and far better for cattle and horses than any grass hay you can make. The Vetch is

Dr. E. LeRoy Jones, Deputy United States Fish Commissioner of Washington, addressed the meeting at some length on the depletion of the fish supply. He said that the fish were being killed by parties using dynamite and dumping sawdust in the small streams and rivers. The imperative necessity of a game and fish law was stressed. He said that the laws now violated in season and out, and no thing can be done to stop it except through the appointment of the commissioner and the enforcement of the law. He said that for the protection of fish were proposed, and Hill Montague was authorized to offer them to the Game and Game Fish Association of the State. He said that the bill was one of the bills, and the State is being flooded with literature urging sportsmen to back it.

MERCHANT DISAPPEARS.

Harry Rosenfield Leaves Rinnoke and Fails to Return.

[Special to The Times-Dispatch.]

Rinnoke, Va., January 8.—A mystery surrounds the disappearance of Harry Rosenfield, thirty-five years old, a dry goods merchant of this city, formerly of Bridgeport, Conn. Rosenfield was a resident of this city until the latter part of December, at which time he left his store in charge of clerks, leaving the city without giving his destination. He told his clerks to remain two days longer. He has never returned.

Rosenfield's clerks conducted the business of the store until January 8, when persons in the neighborhood of the bridge, who had
